Partnership Will Create Innovative, Green, and Healthy Homes

April 23, 2008 (Boston, MA)—Ecohealth Homes, a division of Chatham Hill Residential Design and Build, LLC today announced a new partnership with one of America’s Largest and Most Respected Modular Home Manufacturers, Penn Lyon Homes Corporation to construct cutting edge sustainable and healthy homes.

“Building homes that are both sustainable and healthy requires a new way of thinking,” said Michelle Roberts, President of Chatham Hill. “Through the use of forward-looking design and construction methods and materials that are resource efficient, Ecohealth will provide families with the most environmentally-friendly, healthy and comfortable homes possible, for now and for generations to come.”

Ecohealth Homes are factory-built in modular and/or Structural Insulated Panel components in a secure quality- controlled environment ensuring that every inch of the home is built under the best possible conditions and thoroughly inspected. Much of green building these days still makes allowances for plastics and other materials that release harmful chemicals. Ecohealth uses innovative products and systems so we do not have to sacrifice our future occupants’ health in order to be green.

“Chatham Hill’s Ecohealth Homes are at the cutting edge of the residential green building movement,” said Rebecca Morley, Executive Director for the National Center for Healthy Housing. “They symbolize what green should be – healthy for the environment and the resident.”

The latest in residential building products, materials, and housing designs are continuously researched to offer the widest range of options that are both environmentally-friendly and healthy. The home's entire footprint, from its layout and fixtures to its products and systems, are individually selected to provide each family with a unique healthy living environment.

"We are extremely enthusiastic about this collaboration," stated David Reed, President of Penn Lyon Homes Corporation. "Michelle and her team at Chatham Hill share Penn Lyon's passion and vision for providing environmentally-friendly products to the customer. We look forward to launching a complete series of Ecohealth Homes in the coming months."
